

Appeal to SPQEO readers

This issue of our journal is prepared and printed on-line under tragic circumstances. On 24 February Russia, violating all the principles of international law and humanity, brutally invaded Ukraine. After 12 days of heavy fighting many Ukrainian cities, including Kharkiv, Chernihiv, Sumy, Mariupol, are in ruins, many civilians, including children, women and old persons, were killed by the barbaric shelling and bombardments of the invaders. However, despite all the predictions of different experts, the Ukrainian army and Ukrainian people still hold on and heroically defend their Motherland. The international community is united in it's condemn of Russian invasion.

Despite the fact, that many Ukrainian scientists had to flee from their homes, and some of them were killed by Russian planes, missiles and guns, the academic community of the Nation still acts in its direct field of research as well. The SPQEO presents now its new issue on-line. The printed copy will appear after Russian invasion will be stopped and Ukraine will start its rebuilding period.
